PREFACE.

THIS collection of Proverbs is intended for popular use, and presents in one alphabet the "proverbial philosophy" of the British people, indicating in every case the soil to which a saying belongs. Separate alphabets of Scripture proverbs and Shakspearean sayings and phrases are also given. Irish proverbs appear for the first time in a collection of this kind. The few American sayings incorporated partake more of the character of proverbs-on-probation than of the garnered wisdom of the past, inasmuch as they are mainly the coinage of a well-known humorist, and have yet to be adopted by the common voice.

The volume does not contain one indecent line, omissions of this sort, and the absence of proverbs from foreign countries, may be explained by the fact that, having a popular audience in view, it was not thought desirable to encumber these pages with weeds from the proverb-field, nor with flowers from its distant corners.

The table of Family Mottoes is abridged from Fairbank's Crest-Book of Great Britain and Ireland, by arrangement with the proprietor.

A HANDBOOK OF PROVERBS.

INTRODUCTION

“WHAT is a Proverb?”

It is sometimes hard to define a well-known thing. “A maxim, or ‘aphorism,’ let us say. “A maxim,” says Coleridge, “is a conclusion upon observation of matters of fact.” An aphorism is “short, pithy sentence,” “a precept or principle expressed in a few words.” Is this of Lord Bacon’s, therefore, a proverb?—

“Countries rarely acquired, and yet settled, are matters of burden rather than strength.”

Or this of Goethe’s?—

“A man need not be an architect to live in a house.”

The answer in both cases is, No, and so we shall find that although the Proverb fulfils the conditions of both definitions it differs from the Maxim and the Aphorism in one essential feature which will appear immediately. The etymology of the word (Lat proverbium) supplies, perhaps, the best answer,—pro, forward, and verbum, a word, literally a word or saying coming more readily forward than other sayings. The Greek paroimion, a way-side saying, synonymous with our English by-word, suggests what we hold to be the leading characteristic of a proverb, viz, popularity. Here is a handful of definitions more or less accurate —

“Remnants which, on account of their shortness and correctness, have been saved of the wreck and ruins of ancient philosophy.” —Aristotle

“Short sentences, into which, as in rules, the ancients have compressed their aphorisms.”

“Well known and well used dicta, framed in a somewhat out-of-the-way form.” —Erasmus

“Edgy tools of speech, which cut and penetrate the knots of business and affairs.”

“Sacula pudentis” — darts or javelins of the wise. —Henriett

“Fragments of wisdom.” —J. Disraeli

“Short sentences drawn from long experience.” —Cervantes

“Short sentences frequently repeated by the people.” —Dr Johnson

"The people's voice. *—Howell

"Intense expression of condensed idea. '—Tupper

Of the foregoing, that of Dr Johnson seems to us to be nearest the truth, as it describes the Proverb by what we have called its leading characteristic. There is one other definition, however, which is by many regarded as the happiest of all—a saying of Earl Russell, often repeated, but seldom correctly—describing a proverb as "The wit of one man, and the wisdom of many"†

"Genuine proverbs," says the humorist who writes under the nom de plume of Josh Billings—"genuine proverbs are like good cambric needles—short, sharp, and shiny" and another writer of good things (Howell, already mentioned), who is also fond of alliteration, says they must possess shortness, sense, and salt. Waiving the question of the strict accuracy of the latter saying, to which Archbishop Trench‡ takes exception, we may be satisfied with any of the above descriptions and opinions, provided that the one indispensable condition, adoption by the people, is fulfilled.

Proverbs abound amongst the common people in every part of the world. In other times, too, men of the highest rank did not disdain to use them, although there have been those, like Lord Chesterfield, who disapproved of their use by the "upper ten," and, like Shakespeare's Coriolanus, contemned the multitude and their proverbs—

"Hang 'em!

They said they were an hungry, sighed forth proverbs—

That, hunger broke stone walls that dogs must eat

That meat was made for n ouths that, the gods sent not

Corn for the rich n en only,—with these shreds

They vented their complunings"

A curious instance of the favour in which proverbs were at one time held by the upper classes is quoted in Disraeli's Curiosities of Literature, from Townshend's Historical Collections. "A member of the House of Commons, in the reign of Elizabeth, made a speech entirely composed of the most homely proverbs. The subject was a bill against double payments of book-debts. Knavish tradesmen were then in the habit of swelling out their book-debts with those who took credit, particularly to their younger customers. One of the members who began to speak, 'for very fear shook,' and stood silent. This nervous orator was followed by a blunt and true

And what are proverbs but the people's voice?

Come first, and current made by common choice?

Then sure they must have weight and truth withal

Sonn t prefixed to his Proverbs

† The Editor received the following letter from his lordship a few months ago—

'Sir,—I once said to Sir James Mackintosh, 'My definition of a proverb is The wit of one man and the wisdom of many.' Sir James repeated this at Holland House, and thus my definition got into circulation.

representative of the famous governor of Baratania, delivering himself thus — 'It is now my chance to speak something, and that without humming or hawing I think this law is a good law even reckoning makes long friends As far goes the penny as the penny's master Vigilantibus non dormientibus jura subvertunt' 'ay the reckoning over-night, and you shall not be troubled in the morning If ready money be mensura publica, let every one cut us coat according to his cloth When his old suit is in the wane, let him stay till that his money bring a new suit in the increase' Many honourable names might be mentioned in connection with collections of proverbs, the literature of which dates back to the fifteenth century at least, when Erasmus wrote his Adagia, which set continental scholars on fire to collect and publish the proverbs of their own countries And little wonder Homely and practical, witty and wise, these fragments of thought take hold of the mind far more readily than dull formula and long-drawn arguments, are better adapted and applied to our various humours and capacities, their sparkle and point make them easily remembered, while the keen knowledge of human nature displayed in them, and the sound counsels they administer, make their study a source of unending pleasure and benefit to all

Proverbs are older than the oldest books "The Spaniards date the origin of their refranes que dicen las viejas tras el fuego, 'sayings of old wives by their fire-sides,' before the existence of any writings in their language, from the circumstance that these are in the old romance or rudest vulgar idiom The most ancient poem in the Edda, 'The sublime speech of Odin,' abounds with ancient proverbs, strikingly descriptive of the ancient Scandinavians Undoubtedly proverbs in the earliest ages long served as the unwritten language of morality, and even of the useful arts Like the oral traditions of the Jews, they floated down from age to age on the lips of successive generations The name of the first sage who sanctioned the saying would in time be forgotten, while the opinion, the metaphor, or the expression remained consecrated into a proverb! Such was the origin of the memorable sentences by which men learnt to think and to speak appositely, they were precepts which no man could contradict, at a time when authority was valued more than opinion, and experience preferred to novelty The proverbs of a father became the inheritance of a son, the mistress of a family perpetuated hers through her household, the workman condensed some traditional secret of his craft into a proverbial expression When countries are not yet populous, and property has not yet produced great inequalities in its ranks, every day will show them how the drunkard and the glutton come to poverty, and drowsiness clothes a man with rags At such a period he who gave counsel gave wealth" *

* Diderot's Curiosities of Literature

In this way multitudes of the sayings that have been familiar to us from childhood have come down through successive generations, crystallised into forms of speech which vary but little in the course of centuries. While it is almost impossible to discover with certainty the originators, it is quite possible to trace back to the infant ages many of these gems of thought, "jewels * * * that on the stretch'd forefinger of all time sparkle for ever," as brightly flashing in their ancient beds as with ourselves to-day. Not to go into this matter too minutely, and putting out of the question the collection of the Hebrew monarch, we may mention that one of our copy-books, Let all communications consist good manners, quoted by St Paul,* is a line from the Greek comic poet Menander (born at Athens, B.C. 342), but it is evidently as a proverb that both apostle and poet quote it, and its origin, therefore may date from a much more remote age. Another familiar word, One must not look a gift horse in the mouth, is found used by St Jerome, a Latin father of the fourth century, who also gives, as a proverb, old even in his day, the adage, Larks should have good memories. And a host of pithy sentences of a proverbial cast (such as the famous Know thyself) have come down to posterity from the Lacedæmonians or Spartans, whose country was called Laconia, and gave its name to a form of speech designated laconic. This style, we are informed by Plato, was adopted by the whole nation, who affected to appear unlearned, but, he says, this was merely a political artifice. "If any one wishes to converse with the meanest of the Lacedæmonians, he will at first find him, for the most part, apparently despicable in conversation, but afterwards, when a proper opportunity presents itself, this same mean person, like a skilful jurgator, will hurl a sentence worthy of attention, short and contorted, so that he who converses with him will appear to be in no respect superior to a boy." That to laconise, therefore, consists much more in philosophising than in the love of exercise, is understood by some of the present age, and was known to the ancients, they being persuaded that the ability of uttering such sentences as these is the province of a man perfectly learned." Plato assures those who in other cities imagined they laconised, merely by imitating the severe exercises and other warlike manners of the Lacedæmonians, that they were grossly deceived.

It has been supposed that there are twenty thousand proverbs circulating amongst European nations. This is a mere calculation, and, we are inclined to think, an incorrect one, based upon the proverbs collected in the various countries, and which have been handed down. A vast number, it appears to us, must escape the eye of the most diligent collector, household words that have never been, and may never be, set down, the property, if we may say so, of particular localities, or even of families—common in one household or district, but unknown elsewhere, words of wisdom bequeathed by one peasant generation to another, and drifting down the centuries, more secure of immortality in their verbal transmission than in the antiquary's historic page. In confirmation of this, we may mention that a number of Scottish proverbs came into our hands recently, through the kindness of a friend in Aberdeen, who assures us that, although they have not appeared in print before, they have been handed down by his ancestors as common in the family for generations. If it were possible thus to get at these family stores throughout any one country, we are persuaded that the number of proverbs belonging to that country would be seen to be much greater than is usually believed.

A perplexing question arises, however, in connection with the ownership of proverbs, and one which, in a multitude of cases, can never be satisfactorily set at rest. It is a fact well known to the collector, and even to the most ordinary reader, of proverbs, that the same saying may be found adopted in countries widely apart, the same imagery being employed to express the same idea, the stamp of the original mind upon it in every one of its forms, no matter what the language in which it is couched, and all trace of its author lost. How, then, are we to attribute to this or that country a saying which twenty other countries may claim with equal reason? "In quoting it as of one, it often seems as if we were doing wrong to many, while yet it is sometimes almost, or oftener still altogether, impossible to determine to what nation it first belonged, so that others drew it at second hand from that one, even granting that any form in which we now possess it is really the oldest of all. More than once this fact has occasioned a serious disappointment to the zealous collector of the proverbs of his native country. Proud of the rich treasures which in this kind it possessed, he has very reluctantly discovered, on a fuller investigation of the whole subject, how many of these which he counted native, the peculiar heirloom and glory of his own land, must at once and without hesitation be resigned to others, who can be shown beyond all doubt to have been in earlier possession of them. While in respect of many more, if his own nation can put in a claim to them as well as others, yet he is compelled to acknowledge that it can put in no better than many competitors, and oftentimes a claim not as good as theirs."

The principle of ascription, where it has to be laid down, must be a very lax one indeed. Where the same familiar objects are available, and laid hold of to denote some idea or experience which may occur to all men, the result will be a form of expression capable of but little variation. Thus, a proverb, such as "A rolling stone gathers no moss" which is common in a dozen countries, and whose origin is lost in oblivion, may be said to belong to each of those countries by the mere fact of its adoption there. But, on the other hand, a proverb, such as

"He starts at straws, and lets windlins gae," which applies to persons who "stain at gnats and swallow camels," needs no lengthened investigation to prove its nativity, although its author is no more known than the fate of the lost pleiad. And proverbs like the following, which are connected with persons, places, or events, are identified easily enough —

He dines with Duke Humphrey—i.e., goes fasting —English Will to Cupar, man to Cupar —Scottish Hand over head, as men took the Covenant —Scottish Beef to the heels, like a Mullingar heifer —Irish

But the form of expression, where there is no stronger claim, may be allowed to fix the nationality of a proverb, although it may have equivalents in many other tongues. Thus,

"To carry saut to Dysart and puddings to Tranent," the meaning of which is plain enough, is a Scottish proverb, we should say, and yet it is only a Scottish form of the English saying, To carry coals to Newcastle, or the French and German, To send water to the sea, or the Dutch, To send fir to Norway, or the Asiatic, To carry blades to Damascus. The imagery is varied in the different countries—the idea, that to do so-and-so is foolish and superfluous, is the same. We conclude, therefore, that in the absence of a direct claim, the common usage in any country of a proverb which prevails also in others is sufficient ground for its being regarded as one of the common stock belonging to that country.

But, after all, the question—although a perplexing one—is not very important. Wherever we go we find masses of this folk-lore, which, howsoever it came there, assists the student of human nature in no small measure to understand the people among whom it prevails. There is the spirit of our one humanity in all proverbs, and yet not so uniform as to hide the varying characteristics of nations from appearing more or less strongly in their several collections. Those of the Spaniards may be recognised, it is said, "by a certain grandezza, a stateliness and thoughtfulness, blended though they be with humour and irony, and by the spirit of chivalry, honour, and freedom with which they are filled." The Italian proverbs are, to a certain extent, replete with a certain shrewdness and selfishness, and while they are fraught with unbridled passion, teach doctrines of cynicism and general distrust, yet, on the other hand, there are many of the noblest stamp, of a delicate refinement of beauty, of a subtle wisdom, teaching honour and honesty, plain-dealing and uprightness. In the same way, the French, the German, and the English, impart a certain distinctive type and stamp to their homely sayings, which tells a distinct tale respecting their own inner life and national peculiarities. Of the Scottish proverbs it has been said that there is a shrewdness, although deficient in delicacy, about them—that they are ‘idiomatic, facetious, and strike home.’” In such of the Irish as we have been able to collect, there appears the rich humour, the delicate poetic thrill, so characteristic of the people. Those of our American cousins are marked by the fresh and striking imagery, and the inevitable extravagance, which distinguish their utterances at all times.

In a book, entitled, Proverbs of all Nations, compared, explained, and illustrated,* the author has performed a rare service in connection with our subject. He has made a collection of British proverbs, “arranged according to their import and affinity, and under each of them has grouped translations of their principal equivalents in other languages. By this means are formed natural families of proverbs, the several members of which acquire increased significance from the light they reflect on each other. At the same time, a source of lively interest is opened for the reader, who is thus enabled to observe the manifold diversities of form which the same thought assumes, as expressed in different times and by many distinct races of men, to trace the unity in variety which pervades the oldest and most universal monuments of opinion and sentiment among mankind, and to verify for himself the truth of Lord Bacon’s well-known remark, that ‘the genius, wit, and spirit of a nation are discovered in its proverbs.’” Take the following, as specimens, from this interesting little volume—

“Home is home, be it ever so homely.”
 “Home is a homely word.”—Scottish “Homely” and “harmely” are not synonymous, but imply different ideas associated with home. The one means plain, unadorned, fit for everyday use, the other means familiar, pleasant, dear to the affections. “To every bird its nest is fair” (French, Italian). “East and west, at home the best” (German). “The rock of my own house,” says the Spaniard, “is better than the fire of another’s.” The same feeling is expressed with less energy, but far more tenderly, in a beautiful Italian proverb, which loses greatly by translation. “Home, my own home, tiny though thou be, to me thou seemest an abbey" Two others in the same language are exquisitely tender "My home, my mother's breast" How touching this simple juxtaposition of two loveliest things! Again, "Tie me hand and foot, and throw me among my sins"

'Where there's a will there's a way'
"A right (strong) man ne'er wanted a law" —Scottish.

"A good knight is not at a loss for a lance" (Italian) A man of sense and resolution will make instruments of whatever comes to his hands, and truly "He is not a good mason who refuses any stone" (Italian) "He that has a good head does not want for hats" (French)

"Where the will is ready, the feet are light"

'The willing dancer is easily played to' (Serbian) "The will does it" (German) "A voluntary burden is no burden" (Italian) "The labour we delight in physics pain," says Shakespeare, and again,

"A merry heart goes all the day
Your sad tires in a mile a."

Every reader of Sir Walter Scott's works must have remarked the frequent and happy use made of Scottish proverbs in the Tales of my Landlord, the "sayings" of some of his characters show us how intimately the Great Wizard knew the people of whom he wrote—how thoroughly he had entered into their thoughts and feelings and modes of life. Gilt, too, in his parish Annals, and the Littrick Shepherd, in his Tales, have in some measure approached Sir Walter in this respect, but are still far behind him.

"Reuben Butler! he hush in his pouch the value o' the wuld blae coat he wear—but it doesn't signify. And, as he spoke, Dumbiedikes shut successively, and with vehemence, the drawers of his treasury. A fair offer, Jennie is the cause o' fend the man may bring a horse to the water, but t'enty run na gar him drink." —Heart of Midlothian

"Fair and softly gae's far," said Melchior, "and if a fule may gie a wise man counsel, I wad hae him think twice or he melts with knockdunder." —Heart of Midlothian

"I fear," said Morton, "there is very little chance my good friend Cuddie, of our getting back to our old occupation. Hout, sir, hout sir," replied Cuddie, "it's ye gude to keep up a hardy heart—as broken a ship's come to land." —Old Mortality

"A wamefu's a wamefu, whether it be o' barley meal or bran." —St. Ronan's Well
"I redd ye, Earnscliff (this Hobbie added in a gentle whisper), let us take a cast about as if to draw the wind on a buck—the bog is no abune knee-deep, and better a safe road than bad company." —The Black Dwarf

While on the subject of Scottish proverbs, we cannot omit to notice the copious collection of our friend Mr. Alexander Hislop, the latest and most industrious of Scottish proverb-mongers. The volume referred to* contains some 1,500 proverbs that have not previously appeared in print, and excels the older collections not only in quantity, but in quality nothing offensive meets the eye from the first line to the last, and the volume is enriched by many explanatory notes and illustrations Mr Hislop has kindly permitted us to make use of his labours, and we thank him accordingly

To another friend—Mr William Middleton, Aberdeen—who is well versed in every thing auld faunt and Scottish, we owe many of the raciest “sprigs of heather” in the present collection

The limits to which we are necessarily confined in pursuing these rambling observations do not permit us to dwell upon many interesting points connected with the subject of proverbs These are fully and learnedly discussed by the elder Disraeli in his Curiosities of Literature, and, following him, the present Archbishop of Dublin has, in a volume already alluded to, lectured on The Form and Definition of a Proverb—The Generation of Proverbs—The Poetry, Wit and Wisdom of Proverbs—The Morality of Proverbs—and lastly, The Theology of Proverbs, thus well-nigh exhausting the subject Before we pass from our subject, however, it occurs to us to remark upon a considerable proportion of what are called witty proverbs If we have appeared to ignore this class in our observations on proverbs generally, it has not been from a want of appreciation of the point and sparkle which distinguish them There is to be found everywhere a great number of such sayings of the sprightliest kind, but so marred by indecencies of thought and expression as to be unquotable now-a-days Many of these are bond fide proverbs—short, witty, and wise withal, but scarcely worth while collecting, and certainly not very edifying to anybody Others amongst them are not so much proverbs as epigrams, being endowed with all the attributes of that class of compositions, and evidently intended, in structure and length, to pass for the one rather than the other In regard to both, we think their publication as proverbs degrades a form of speech which has the highest sanction, and which has been consecrated to wise and noble ends by the great teachers of the world And lips that spake as never man’s spake have honoured “the science of proverbs,” using for His high purposes sayings popular at the time, and commonly repeated to this day,* and contributing many others of His own to the great store-house of the people’s wisdom

In making this collection of proverbs we have not found any lack of material, except in the case of one country—viz, Ireland We do not look for any large number from a nation of yesterday, like America, but, that a people so endowed with wit and sentiment, and with a history stretching far into the mists of antiquity, should be without its gathering of proverbs, amongst abundance of other antiquities, is somewhat surprising We have sought far and

* Luke 11. 23, Luke 11. 24, John 11. 37, &c., &c near for such a collection, but cannot find one we have advertised for it in the journal with "the largest circulation in Ireland," but without response. As a forlorn hope, we took to reading the works of some popular Irish authors—Lover and Carleton, for instance, and found some grains of the gold we sought for there, but could not bestow upon the search the time and patience necessary for such a task, and have left it to be performed by some lover of his native soil, with a wider knowledge of Irish hearts and homes, and literature, than we at present possess. A collection of "Irish Proverbs," at the end of Bourke's College Irish Grammar, may be mentioned as the best and worst that we can find, they are, for the most part, as dull as ditch-water, and we have striven in vain to imagine an Irish peasant—the readiest and wittiest in the world—talking in pompous words like these—

"God is bounteous and generous,
God is liberal in scarcity,
But the God whom you have in Connaught
Is not like the liberal God of the Ulsterians."

"Associate with the nobility, and be in favour with them but, on no account be cold with your own people."

"Often a person commits through impulse (or passion) an act from which flows much evil."

This is very like Tupperism! One ounce of Pat Kennedy's, from Leinster, appended to his Modern Irish Anecdotes, and reprinted here, is worth a pound of it

PROVERBS

(Reprinted, by permission, from "The Saturday Review")

PROVERBS may be regarded as the gems of language, not only in the sense that they are small, bright, and of universal currency, but also in the mystery of their composition, as being a work of ages, a secret birth. It is as impossible to make a proverb as to make an emerald, or that black diamond which constitutes the more familiar sparkle of material life. We probably none of us know how much we use proverbs in our daily speech, but it is certain that if they were withdrawn from the language, we should find ourselves pulled up at every turn, for we may also say that a language is not a language till it has proverbs imbedded in it, as a people are not a people till they have antiquities and a past to refer to. To be a deliberate proverb-maker is really the highest form of impertinence, for a proverb speaks with the assumption of universal experience, it expects general acquiescence as a right—as a matter of course, its tone allows of no dispute or question, and is an appeal to universal knowledge. If it goes beyond the common sympathy of a nation or of mankind, it is an epigram, a witticism, a jeu d'esprit. The true proverb may have been the word of any wise man, high or low, king or peasant. How, being at once so true and so generally accepted, it escapes being a flat truism is its secret—a secret which the proverb-maker has yet to find out. Archbishop Trench has brought together various definitions of a proverb. It is "a saying without an author," it is "shortness, sense, and salt," it is "much matter decocted into few words," and so on. But beyond all this it is certainly the child of good fortune. Its start in life must have been something extraordinary—it must have been born of occasion, the occasion like the author being unknown. Its adaptation to the universal mind was only shown by universal use—unaccountable by mere reason. "You must not look a gift-horse in the mouth" was a proverb in St Jerome's time. One of Ariosto's heroes in the Orlando Furioso jumps from the frying-pan into the fire. How telling must have been the incidents attending the original gift-horse rashly criticized, or the fatal imprudence of the hapless denizens of the frying-pan, to have stamped their lesson so indelibly on the world's records! and how impossible for research to get at them! We may perhaps conceive a state of society in which proverbs—at least one most popular class of them—might have their birth, when every trade and calling was common property, every process open to general observation, and the common wit and wisdom could exercise itself upon them. One of the uses of the proverb is, we see, to keep up the tradition of this community of occupation and familiarity with the work of life. A flavour of primitive times is imparted whenever ladies and gentlemen talk of making hay when the sun shines, or advocate cutting their coat according to their cloth, or agree that it is best to wash their soiled linen at home, or are for striking while the iron is hot, or blame statesmen for having too many irons in the fire; or speculators for reckoning their chickens before they are hatched.

Lord Chesterfield, it is true, said that no gentleman quoted proverbs, and he considered the practice an index of inferior training, and we may grant that the ordinary use of them is less in society than in other spheres of action. They have their place in the familiar domestic circle, where people may dogmatize for their own and the general benefit and again, where the appeal is to numbers, when men wish to popularize their style and to awake sympathy; for proverbs are equalizers. The language of progress is not friendly to their use, a man is seeking a precedent when he supports his view by a proverb, and therefore they are not so distinctive a feature in the discourse of Englishmen as we are led to suppose them to be in other countries. Thus, though Shakspeare quotes proverbs, and is considered an authority for their use it must not be forgotten that to be full of them stands with him for being a prosy, pompous, dull old fellow. In a little book of proverbs which lies before us (Sancho Panza's Proverbs Collected and Translated, by Ulick Ralph Burke), the preface quotes Mr Ford as saying, "The constant use of the refram gives the Spaniard his sententious and dogmatical admixture of humour, truism, twaddle, and common sense. A proverb well introduced is as decisive of an argument in Spain as a bet is in England. This shottling and discourse is always greeted with a smile from high and low." A man thus full of old saws and modern instances would scarcely meet with the same favour in an English drawing-room. The Spanish passion for proverbs is traced to the Arabic character of mediæval Spanish civilization, Oriental languages being, in fact, impregnated and permeated with proverbs to an extent which greatly adds to the difficulty of acquiring them. It is putting any nation's proverbs to a severe test to translate them, the terseness, rhyme, ring, and jingle have so much to do with their hold on fancy and memory. Thus the fit union of faith and self-help expressed in the Spanish "A Dios rogando y con el mazo dando" does not tell with the same effect as "Praying to God and hammering away," and "There is great distance between said and done" is but a trite sentiment, while its original is a proverb with an influence—"Del dicho al hecho hay gran trecho." The same with "Cual el tiempo tal el viento," "We must suit our behaviour to the occasion." Many proverbs, however, are independent of the wording. "Ciertos son los toros" conveys an equal sense of excitement when rendered, "Here come the bulls," though the nature of the excitement to the uninitiated is sufficiently different. "La cola falta por desollar," "We have still to skin the tail"—that is, "We have not yet quite finished with the subject"—finds its merit in the neat homeliness of its illustration. Also, "Adobame esos candiles," "Snuff me these candles"—that is, "Clear up this puzzle or this muddle." Some naturally convert themselves into harmonious English—"Pues ya en los nidos de antaño no hay pajaros ogaño," though it loses the rhyme, sounds well as "There are no birds in last year's nest." Some can only be rendered by a counterpart. The very ancient proverb, "Vióse el perro en brigas de cerro," "The dog saw himself in plush breeches" (and would not recognise his companions) is our "beggar on horseback." "No hay estomago que ser un palmo mayor que otro," "No stomach is bigger than another by a span" answers to "An inch is a great deal in a man's nose." The editor remarks on the many Spanish proverbs about the duty of women to stay at home as a trace of the Moorish occupation—"Cada puta hile," "Let every wench mind her spinning," "La que es deseada de ver, tambien tiene de ser vista," "She who desires to see, desires also to be seen;" "Que la doncella honrada a pierna quebrada y en casa" "The virtuous maid and the broken cr leg must stay at home" Gambling supplies Spaniards with many proverbs—"Quien destaja no baraja," "He who shuffles the cards does not cut them," "You may lose as well by a card too much as by a card too little," pronounced a thoroughly Spanish laissez-aller proverb, "Correr el dado," a run of good luck. The Archbishop of Dublin in his little book on proverbs dwells on the lofty, chivalrous tone which characterises many Spanish proverbs—"White hands cannot hurt," "The king goes as far as he may, not as far as he would," and the proud looking of calamity in the face which speaks out in "When thou seest thine house in flames, approach and warm thyself by it" But these are not sayings for the mouths of common folks who use a proverb to express a familiar sentiment better than they can in their own words It is the homely proverb which is the proverb par excellence

The Italians cannot be called less rich in proverbs than the Spanish, though their tone is charged with Machiavellianism, as "Fidarsi è bene, ma non fidarsi è meglio," "To trust is well, to trust nobody is better," and many others in the same strain of selfish prudence, of which history has terrible examples "Così fatta capo ha," "The deed once done there is an end," was the "bad word" by which Mosca tells Dante that he sowed the seed of civil war in Tuscany, and the Italian proverb, "Sometimes clemency is cruelty, and cruelty clemency," by which Catherine de' Medici stilled the scruples of her son on the St Bartholomew massacre, are instances But the whole language is full of proverbial wisdom, to the last degree simple, yet without coarseness Thus, "L' ultimo vestito ce lo fanno senza tasche," "Our last garment is made without pockets," "Chi ha quattrini a buttar via, metti operai e non vi stia," "If you have money to throw away, set on workmen and don't stand by," "Qual che va nelle maniche non può andar ne' gheroni," "What is put in the sleeves can't go into the skirt" This occurs appropriately in I promessi Sposi Manzoni naturally points a moral with a proverb, whether in his own person or in his rustic characters, and always happily, as when the good but pedantic tailor, on receiving a visit from St Federigo Borromeo, is so distracted by the greatness of the occasion and the importance of expressing a fitting sense of it, that the opportunity passes by him, and all he says, to his lasting shame, is "Sì figurì!" (Anglice "Fancy!"), being ever after haunted by the things he might have said, but "Del senno di poi ne son piene le fosse," "The ditches are full of clever after-thoughts" The tailor, however is the only personage we ever find at a loss Manzoni's women especially have a seasonable saying always at hand The hospitable wife is glad that her guest arrives on a fete day, not when "c' era il gatto sul focolare," "the cat in the (empty) grate," and promises one dish of welcome—"Ci sarà un piatto di buon viso" The over-busy housewife must "far

Marta, e da Maddelena," and consoles herself on leaving her birth-place by thinking "La patina ò dove si sta bene"

No nation can beat the Scottish in the keenness and eye to self-interest of its proverbs, though it rather delights in simplicity allied to coarseness, as "Do naething in haste but gripping o' fleas," "Nothing comes of itself but dirt and long nails" They are remarkable, too, for self-reliance — "He that cheats me ance shame fa' him, if he cheat me twice shame fa' me," "The tod ne'er sped better than when he went his ain errand" We cannot think of Scotch proverbs without recalling Andrew Furservice, whose worldly wisdom shines out in them, who pronounced Glasgow Cathedral, after the iconoclastic labours of the Reformers, "as crouse as a cat wi' the fleas cambed off it," who, on being bid to hold his tongue, observes that "A hadden tongue makes a slubbered mouth," but subsides into silence on quoting his mother's instructions —

Be it better, be it worse,
Be ruled by him that has the purse

He has the gift, too, of proverbial illustration so conspicuous in Sam Weller, and proposes to part company with the Bailie with the comparison, "There's sm' sorrow at our parting, as the auld mear said to the broken cart"

There are some subjects which provide matter for proverbs in all languages The halter is one — "Nombrar la sogà en casa del ahorcada," says Sancho Panza, "Nommer la corde chez le pendu," "Non ricordar il capestro in casa dell' impiccato," "Give a thief rope enough," &c, "He that is born to be hanged," "Geld wird nicht gehenkt," "Money does not get hanged," "He was scant o' news that tauld his father was hangit" It is the rubs of life, great and small, which create its proverbs

It is a question how far anybody is really guided by proverbs They point a moral, they confirm an opinion, they impart force to a criticism Do they help us in action? Not often probably, yet where we hesitate it may sometimes urge to a resolution to remember "He that will not when he may," with its sequel, when our courage flags, "Where there's a will there's a way" may act as a needful stimulus "One story's good till another's told" is sometimes a check to precipitate judgment "Two heads are better than one" may well drive us to seek counsel, and "Man proposes, but God disposes," should bring at critical moments of perplexity and disappointment its lesson of resignation That is, all this ought to happen if proverbs are of the use the world thinks them

SCRIPTURAL PROVERBS.

- A FALSE balance is an abomination to the Lord , but a just weight is His delight
- A fool uttereth all his mind , but a wise man keepeth it till afterwards
- A fool's wrath is presently known , but a prudent man covereth shame
- A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favour rather than silver and gold
- A man that has friends must show himself friendly , and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother
- A man of understanding holdeth his peace
- A man's pride shall bring him low , but honour shall uphold the humble in spirit
- A merry heart doeth good like a medicine , but a broken spirit drieth the bones
- A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast , but the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel
- A soft answer turneth away wrath , but grievous words stir up anger
- A virtuous woman is a crown to her husband , but she that maketh ashamed is as rottenness in his bones
- A wise son maketh a glad father , but a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother
- A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver
- As a bird that wandereth from her nest, so is a man that wandereth from his place
- As a dog returneth to his vomit, so a fool returneth to his folly
- As a jewel of gold on a swine's snout, so is a fair woman who is without discretion
- As a madman who casteth firebrands, arrows, and death, so is the man that deceiveth his neighbour, and saith, Am not I in sport?
- * the crackling of thorns under a pot, so is the laughter of the fool

As the whirlwind passeth, so is the wicked no more, but the righteous is an everlasting foundation
As vinegar to the teeth, and as smoke to the eyes, so is the slug-gard to them that send him

Be thou diligent to know the state of thy flocks, and look well to thy herds for riches are not for ever

Before honour is humility

Better is a dry morsel and quietness therewith, than a house full of sacrifices with strife

Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith

Better is a little with righteousness, than great revenues without right

Blessings are upon the head of the just, but violence covereth the mouth of the wicked

Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth

By much slothfulness the building decayeth, and through idleness of the hands, the house droppeth through

By pride cometh contention

Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days

Even a fool, when he holdeth his peace, is counted wise, and he that shutteth his lips is esteemed a man of understanding

Faithful are the wounds of a friend, but the kisses of an enemy are deceitful

Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain, but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised

Fear God, and keep his commandments for this is the whole duty of man

For men to search their own glory* is not glory

Go from the presence of a foolish man, when thou perceivest not in him the lips of knowledge

Go to the ant, thou sluggard consider her ways and be wise

God hath made man upright, but they have sought out many inventions

He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand, but the hand of the diligent maketh rich

* To talk of their own doings

- He that observeth the wind shall not sow, and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap
- He that passeth by and meddleth with strife belonging not to him, is like one that taketh a dog by the ears
- He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city
- He that loveth pleasure shall be a poor man. he that loveth wine and oil shall not be rich
- He that is greedy of gain troubleth his own house, but he that hateth gifts shall live
- He that is of a merry heart hath a continual feast
- He that is first in his own cause seemeth just, but his neighbour cometh and searcheth him
- He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord, and that which he hath given will He pay him again
- He that hideth hatred with lying lips, and he that uttereth a slander, is a fool
- He that spareth the rod hateth his son, but he that loveth him chasteneth betimes
- He that gathereth in summer is a wise son, but he that sleepeth in harvest is a son that causeth shame
- He that walketh uprightly walketh surely, but he that perverteth his ways shall be known
- He that is surety for a stranger, shall smart for it and he that hateth suretyship is sure
- He that keepeth [silent] his mouth, keepeth his life, but he that openeth wide his lips shall have destruction
- He that troubleth his own house shall inherit the wind, and the fool shall be servant of the wise of heart
- Heaviness in the heart of a man maketh it stoop, but a good word maketh it glad
- Hell and destruction are never full, so the eyes of man are never satisfied
- His own iniquities shall take the wicked himself, and he shall be holden with the cords of his own sins
- Hope deferred maketh the heart sick
- If sinners entice thee, consent thou not
- If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength, but wisdom is profitable to direct *
- If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat, and if he be thirsty, give him water to drink for thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head, and the Lord shall reward thee
- If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small
- If ye cast pearls before swine, they will turn again and rend ye in all labour there is profit, but the talk of the lips tendeth only to penury

Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend

It is nought, it is nought, saith the buyer, but when he has gone his way, then he boasteth

It is better to dwell in a corner of the house top, than with a brawling woman in a wide house

Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth a stranger, and not thine own lips

Love not sleep, lest thou come to poverty open thine eyes, and thou shalt be satisfied with bread

Much food is in the tillage of the poor but there is that is destroyed for want of judgment

Of making many books there is no end, and much study is a weariness of the flesh

Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall

Remove not the old landmark, and enter not into the fields of the fatherless

Reprove not a scorner lest he hate thee, rebuke a wise man and he will love thee

Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people

-Say not unto thy neighbour, "Go, and come again, and to-morrow I will give," when thou hast it by thee

Seest thou a man diligent in his business he shall stand before kings, he shall not stand before mean men *

Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words there is more hope of a fool than of him

Strive not with a man without cause, if he have done thee no harm

The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich, and He addeth no sorrow with it

The curse causeless shall not come

The drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty, and drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags

The hand of the diligent shall bear rule but the slothful shall be under tribute

* Anciently in the East, it was an honour to be permitted to stand in the presence of kings, as it is to sit before them in our own country

- The labour of the righteous tendeth to life, the fruit of the wicked to sin
- The memory of the just is blessed, but the name of the wicked shall rot
- The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong
- The rich man is wise in his own conceit, but the poor that hath understanding searcheth him out
- The rich man's wealth is his strong city, the destruction of the poor is their poverty
- The rich ruleth over the poor, and the borrower is servant to the lender
- The simple believeth every word, but the prudent man looketh well to his going
- The sleep of a labouring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much, but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep
- The sluggard will not plough by reason of the cold, therefore shall he beg in harvest, and have nothing
- The slothful man saith, There is a lion without, I shall be slain in the streets
- The poor is hated even of his neighbour, but the rich hath many friends
- The profit of the earth is for all the king himself is served by the field
- The upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it
- The wicked flee when no man pursueth,* but the righteous are bold as a lion
- The wise shall inherit glory, but shame shall be the promotion of fools
- There is that maketh himself rich, yet hath nothing, there is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches
- There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty
- To all the living there is hope a living dog is better than a dead lion
- Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it
- Treasures of wickedness profit nothing, but righteousness delivereth from death
- Wealth maketh many friends, but the poor is separated from his neighbour

* Conscience makes cowards of us all —Shakespeare.

- Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might, for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest.
- When goods increase, they are increased that eat them; and what good is there to the owners thereof saving the beholding of them with their eyes?
- Where no counsel is the people fall, but in the multitude of counsellors there is safety.
- Where no wood is, then the fire goeth out, so where there is no tale-bearer the strife ceaseth.
- When pride cometh then cometh shame, but with the lowly is wisdom.
- Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.
- Whoso findeth a wife findeth a good thing and obtaineth favour of the Lord.
- Wine is a mocker strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.
- Withdraw thy foot from thy neighbour's house lest he be weary of thee, and so hate thee.
- Withhold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thine hand to do it.
- Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep, so shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth and thy want as an armed man.

PROVERBS.

As Love and I late haroured in one inn
 With proverbs thus each other entertain.
 "In love there is no lack," thus I begin
 "Fair words make for us," repliest thou again.
 "Who speaks so sweet doth scarce to speed," quoth I,
 "As well," saith he, "too forward as too slow,"
 "Fortune attends the bold," I reply,
 "A heavy man," quoth he, "ne'er wins at woe."
 "Labour is light," quoth I, "where love doth pay," Saith he, "Light burdens heavy, if fair or true."
 Quoth I, "The man lost, cost the owner."
 "I have seen a fair friend," he repliest in scorn,
 And having thus awhile each other awar'd,
 For as we met, so fools again we parted.
